It's hard to remember that what we see in Graem is just a highlight, and these images almost never show the whole picture (I didn't mean word play) or the ups and downs of a person's life. Austrian-born model Jazz Eger set out to shine a light on this truth by making a significant change in the way she presents herself on Instagram. Lager has 16,000 followers, and her feed is filled with glamorous photos of her modelling around the world. But recently, Agar revissigned these photos and edited some captions to include honest accounts of what's really going on behind She will counter-epitave any revelation with the hashtag #truthbehindthisshot. In the caption of a mirror selfie in which she sits on the edge of a bed, Agar wrote: It took me something of 15 minutes to take and I was close to falling out of my bed B.C. I had to make my legs look thin. Beneath another beautifully styled shot. Wrote Eger, my agency told me on the day [the day this photo was taken] that my thighs were too wide and that I would have to lose weight so I could have a chance at London Fashion Week. I was already underweight so I decided not to lose weight. I still got LFW clearance. After editing the caption, Agar posted a new selfie, in which she wrote: At this point the only reason I'm still on Instagram is that BC's casting directors started asking how many followers I have so they can decide whether they consider me or not. I don't know how to feel about it, but hey, it's me surviving a selfie to stay in the game. Brutal honesty like Eger's serves as a much-needed reminder that what we see on our screens is only a fraction of what's going on in someone's life. Check out some of Egger's photos below to see her behind-the-scenes truths. (Cats are creatures of mystery, after all!) Because cats don't have the same reputation as other animals revered all over the world (we're looking at you, dogs) it's important to represent them well.
